ABSTRACT:

The talk will provide an overview of complex networked systems including quantifying, managing, and designing heterogeneous networked systems. Methods of measuring and assessing the performance of networked systems will be discussed including techniques of sparse approximation in network measurements, and algebraic and topological statistical metrics for performance. Strategies of quantifying risk over different geometric and statistical classes of networks will be examined as well as methods of tracking and coding dynamic network flows.